

Description

The Upper Agora and Antonine Nymphaeum of Sagalassos, SW-Turkey. This public space emerged in the Late Hellenistic-early Roman Imperial period, and was paved in the second quarter of the 1st c. CE. During the 1st c. CE it gradually became enclosed by various public, political and religious buildings. The restored Antonine Nymphaeum, built during the second half of the 2nd c. CE, eventually came to dominate the northern end of this square, and is one of the archaeological site's major crowd pullers.

The data were collected by Global Digital Heritage in August 2019, as part of the University of Leuven Sagalassos Archaeological Research Project and supported by the Global Heritage Fund. Model was processed in Reality Capture from 270 Faro scans, 3481 terrestrial photographs, and 1086 Drone photographs

Specifications

Country: Turkey

Region: Burdur Province

Site: Sagalassos

Age: Antiquity

Internal ID: Agora_w_Scans

Digitization date: 20-29/08/2019

Photos / scans number: 57

Hardware: Insta 360 pro

Lens: 6 x F2.4 fisheyes

Lighting: Natural

Model URL:

<https://globaldigitalheritage.org/model/upper-agora-and-antonine-nymphaeum-of-sagalassos/>