

Description

Archaeological remains of the old Alcázar Mayor (Nasir Alcázar) of the medieval Islamic city of Mursiya (Murcia, Spain), preserved under the current church of San Juan de Dios. In this area it has been possible to discover the remains of the old private oratory of the fortress, part of the wall and a royal pantheon. In the pantheon or rawda have been located the remains of nine tombs attributed to the family of Emir Ibn Mardanís (popularly called Wolf King by Christians). The tombs are covered by mqabriyya made with white marble. Among the tombs found there are several of small size that are attributed to young children although they have not yet been excavated. In the rest of the tombs, the bodies that were excavated followed the Islamic ritual of burial, that is, with the face looking at Mecca and the body on its side.
